Shells Pour Into Reich's Industrial Ruhr; Allied Spearhead Nears Essen

International News Service
Allied armies widened their 35-foot foothold along the Rhine today as the Nazis themselves reported several divisions have concentrated opposite Duesseldorf for a smash across the Reich's traditional last-ditch western water barrier.

The flaming eastern front, two plan drives to the Baltic have had an estimated one million troops on Germany's north-defense lines, placing the Red Army in position for the long drive on Berlin.

At the same time, history's mightiest aerial blitz roared into 21st consecutive day with German radio warnings of bomber formations approaching western northwestern Germany.

In the western ground front, Allied armies hammered at the dimming German bulge west of the Rhine, and spearheaded through the defenses of Cologne at six points to within less than two miles of the

Ninth Army stormed northward from positions on the Rhine north and south of Duesseldorf to bring the industrial city of Essen within range of its big guns. 9TH ARMY SEIZES APPROACHES TO 2 BRIDGES

Paris—U. S. Ninth Army forces seized the western approaches of two bridges across the Rhine at Homberg today as Allied columns swept up to the German waterway for an all-out invasion of the industrial Ruhr.

Allied sources disclosed that the U. S. First Army had broken into the defenses of Cologne at a half dozen points and were within less than two miles of the city, the German radio said the final battle for the great industrial center was under way and that civilians had been evacuated from the area.

Troops of the Ninth and Canadian First armies encountered terrific resistance early today from German rearwards as they fled across the remaining Rhine bridges near Wesel to the north, and Duisburg further south. Dispatches from the headquarters of Field Marshal Montgomery disclosed that the Ninth Army had seized the western approaches of both a railroad and a highway bridge at Homberg, both of which were still intact. Allied Supreme Headquarters revealed that the Ninth Army had made gains of one to six miles, further constricting the Nazi pocket still on the west bank of the Rhine above Cologne and south of Duesseldorf.

The First Army, however, was encountering "skillful" resistance from the Nazis before their battered Rhine city of Cologne.

Despite the partial blackout it was revealed that the Third Army made gains of more than three miles northeast and southeast of Pruem along a stretch of 15 miles and drove the Germans back toward the Kyll River which their patrols already had crossed north of Trier.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
(Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

Vandenberg and Stassen

Washington, Mar. 3. THE PRESENCE on the American delegation to the San Francisco conference of two such outstanding Republicans as Senator Arthur Vandenberg, of Michigan, and Commander Harold Stassen, of Minnesota, has given rise to much discussion in the last few weeks. Mostly, first, why were these particular men chosen? Second, what course will they pursue?

AS TO the first, there is little room for doubt. Conceding the desirability of having a Republican Senator as a member, Senator Vandenberg was the logical, and almost inevitable, choice, made so by his recent utterances on international co-operation and his generally acknowledged soundness in matters of foreign policy. Concerning Mr. Stassen, his selection was not so simple. As Mr. Krock, of the New York

JOB-PROMISES VS. DEEDS

So many glowing assurances of the eagerness of the New Deal to encourage "free enterprise" have been given, and so many bright promises of sixty million jobs, that it is only natural some Americans have taken these political promises too seriously.

An analysis recently made by the New York Times of complaints of discharged War Veterans should give food for thought to all men and women who think that Wallace, Byrnes, Hopkins or someone else in the Left-Wing coterie has a program designed to help the little fellow who needs help—a program designed to do more than merely keep in power the New Deal Party now in charge of the White House.

If there is any group in the world entitled to the sympathetic help of everyone, it is those men who, either by reason of wounds or for other cause, after fighting the war for years, now are returned to the status of civilians and who are trying to establish themselves in life.

The trials and exasperations of these men who turn to the New Deal agencies which have been boasting so loudly of what they will do for these men in wholesale lots after the war can be understood only by examining some individual cases.

One such agency complained about is the OPA. Alert publicity departments have been saying for some time that special consideration would be given to war veterans seeking to set up businesses.

A war veteran who read such publicity and applied to the OPA for help in his own problems said of this OPA's official reaction to these articles:

"I was laughingly informed that that was merely wishful thinking."

Another case is that of a Des Moines veteran who wanted to open a small doughnut and coffee shop.

He raised $3500 by borrowing against his war bonds and insurance, and, having heard of the help which OPA promised those in his circumstances, got the following long-distance runaround.

First he was told the coffee-shop was all right, but the doughnuts were out, because some technicality prevented his being allowed sugar for their manufacture.

He then found a formula for the doughnuts which did not use cane sugar. Other necessary ingredients, including lard for frying, were approved. Thereupon he bought equipment, and a lease.

Just as he was about to start operations, shortening was put back on rationing. He then made new application, only to be informed that further technicalities prohibited his receiving more than enough shortening for over-the-counter sales—a small fraction of the capacity of the equipment he had bought, and too small a business in itself to warrant his opening his shop.

When he attempted to press his application, he was silenced by the reminder that, if he had been maintaining a business of this type sometime in the past (presumably instead of fighting in the army) then his application might have had more favorable attention.

Included among the complaints are many instances of veterans who, as individuals, failed completely to win any help from the OPA officials—but who, when they appealed to veterans' organizations or other groups of potential political influence, quickly received exactly the

THE GERMAN MENTALITY

The timely point is frequently being made that it is almost impossible for peoples of Allied nations even to speculate intelligently about the extent of the German people's resistance because it is impossible for a non-German to even come close to understanding them. It is true that the world has frequently been misled and that it has sometimes calculated on an earlier end to the war, all predicated on the theory that the reactions of the German mentality were like those of other races.

Competent authorities often point to the fact that the German people respond more readily to authority than most other groups. The basic yearnings for freedom do not seem to be as deeply rooted in the German as in, say, the Greek or Gaul or Czech. Apparently, the German does not lack physical courage, but he lacks moral courage. Some students have referred to Germany as a nation with an inferiority complex.

The German people for twelve years have been subjected to the most skillful propaganda machine ever invented. For twelve years they have had only one source of information, all of it twisted to one point. The result is that the Germans are a sick people, who do not know what is wrong with them.

Some observers who have studied the Germans at close hand firmly believe that the German people do not yet know that they can not win the war. Goebbels is far more clever than his critics are willing to admit. He has not hesitated to exploit German reverses, on the apparent theory that it was not good policy to deny what in the long run could not be kept secret. The result seems to be that the Germans have a trust and a faith in the propaganda machine which feeds their minds. They simply do not know better.

Many informed individuals lean to the view that the German—even the German who started out twelve years ago as an anti-Nazi—has been completely re-educated into something beyond the comprehension of the average American. Outwardly the Germans seem to bear resemblance to many other groups, but these authorities contend that all their reactions are warped, that their ideas of right and wrong, good or bad, permissible or forbidden, are so different from American conceptions that predictions as to their reactions are almost invariably erroneous.

Hitler seems to have abandoned his former conviction that the bigger the lie the more readily it will be believed. His radio propagandists now scream that the Allies plan to exterminate Germany.

Goering's boast at the beginning of the war that no bombs would ever fall on Germany seems to call for an explanation that conditions have changed.

Hitler's most historic words to date are, "We have just begun to retreat."

ECHOES OF THE PAST

(By Courier Staff Member)

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issue dated at Bristol July 3, 1884. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

Farmers in upper Bucks and Montgomery counties are removing stumps very successfully by means of dynamite of 20 per cent power. By means of a crow-bar they make a hole as far under the stump as possible and insert the cartridge and fuse. Isaac G. Gerhart, of Telford, lately in this way lifted an entire tree, 30 inches in diameter, with an ordinary charge.

The borough treasurer, James Wright, received between $1400 and $1500 taxes on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

The Bristol Bicycle Club is to have a meeting at the Wheatland track tomorrow morning. The races are as follows: One-half mile bicycle race; five mile race, bicycle vs. horse; five mile bicycle race; 100 yard foot race. The track is now being put in condition.

For a number of weeks two men, who made their headquarters at the White Hall Hotel, Newtown, have been doing a profitable business selling common dress goods and cloths to farmers and their families in the surrounding country. They employed persons to drive them around, who were familiar with the names of farmers, and at many places sold about $50 worth each of their old style goods. Farmers would give their notes for the goods, which were cashed by local brokers. Some of the business men of Newtown became indignant and had warrants issued last week on the parties, who were charged with trading without a license, but before they were served the birds had migrated.

A schooner, with about 30 couples on board from Wilmington, Del., anchored opposite Bristol yesterday afternoon.

Bucks County was again invaded on Monday night by a gang of Jersey bruisers. Samuel Lloyd, Jr., and John Boyce, amateur pugilists of Trenton, accompanied by a number of their companions, crossed the Delaware and engaged in a slugging match. The report given of the affair says: "Boyce is 5 feet, 10 inches, high and weighs 170 pounds. Lloyd is five inches shorter, and thirty pounds lighter. The fight was with bare knuckles for $25 a side and personal satisfaction. The contest began about 10 o'clock and lasted for an hour, six rounds being fought. Lloyd drew first blood in the first round, and finished his antagonist around the body severely in each succeeding one until the seventh, when Boyce failed to come to time, when Lloyd was given the stakes. His face was badly cut and scratched. We have not heard that there have been any attempts made to arrest the offenders.

allowances which they, merely as citizens fresh out of the army, had been refused.

This of course is further evidence of what many Americans already have noted, with varying reactions—that the New Deal procedure, particularly as carried out through bureaucracy, is rule of men and not of law.

In none of the various cases would there have been need for either delay or confusion if, in the first instance, the regulations of the OPA or other Federal agency involved had been simple and understandable; and second, if appeal to the judicial branch of government had been possible.

The patience of the American public with the incompetency and inefficiency of so many of the politically-staffed New Deal bureaucracies, merely because they have been told these annoyances are a necessary part of the war effort, has been equalled only by the good-natured belief on so many American's part that the gilded promises of New Deal spokesmen represented something tangible—something more than mere campaign talk.

If there is a growing trend toward taking some of the New Deal's self-praise with a grain of salt, it is an extremely hopeful sign for the future well-being of the American people.

CHAPTER THIRTY-THREE

And Nugent said, "All right. Just a few more questions. The night your father died, Brent, you were found in the linen room. How did you get there?"

"I told you everything I knew about that."

"You said someone struck you. Who?"

"I don't know. I've told you. I didn't know anyone was near me."

"You say you were in the hall, starting downstairs, your back to the corridor. How did you get into the linen room where your wife—I mean Miss Cable—found you?"

"I don't know. That's the truth. You've no case against me."

Nugent looked at him slowly. "I'm not saying I have," he said. "But where there's murder, there's motive. And everybody knows that you and Mrs. Brent..."

"Can't we leave Mrs. Brent out of this?"

"Not very well," said Nugent. But after a moment's thoughtful silence he said no more of Alexis and went on instead to Conrad Brent's will, asking Craig if he knew its main provisions. Craig said he did. "My father told me."

"How did he make his money?"

Craig glanced at the Lieutenant with a little surprise. "It's no secret. He inherited from his father, quite a lot; I don't know how much. He invested it—oh, a long time ago. Before I was born. Anyway, everything he touched prospered. In the summer of 1929 he sold; everything was almost at its peak. Since then he's done very little buying or selling of stocks."

"He was a very rich man."

"Yes," said Craig. "He was. That is, it wasn't anything fantastic. But more than enough."

Nugent, hard and sinuous as a whip in his trim uniform, leaned over the railing at the foot of the bed. Lights touched his narrow high cheekbones and reflected in small points in his gray green eyes.

"Brent, there was a queer codicil to your father's will. I mean, he'd lived in America all his life..."

"Oh, that," said Craig abruptly. "You mean he wanted to be buried in Germany. At Stuttgart. Yes, I know. It was an odd notion of his. When it struck him years ago, he had it written into his will; then, after his recent marriage, when his new will was written I suppose that was just carried over. I am sure that he'd changed his mind about it."

"Why did he want it, in the first place?"

"You'd have to understand and know my father to understand that," said Craig slowly. "I'll try to explain. He once had a kind of hobby for family; he dug into his genealogy, oh, away back when. Unearthed a single direct line, and clung to it. Got hold of the coat of arms, all possible records and history, everything. He was of German descent; although I think his father came to America and made his fortune before the Civil War. My father had time on his hands; the study of genealogy interested him."

"A hobby," said Nugent. "I see. He didn't take it too seriously, did he?"

"What do you mean?"

"Well, did he consider going back to Germany to live, for instance?"

"Goodness, no," said Craig. "He was a little hipped about family, that was all. He thought a lot about pure Nordic blood..."

"Approved of some of Hitler's ideas, in other words?"

"No! It was only at the beginning of the Hitler regime that he was rather taken with some of the ideology it claimed—resurrecting the old Teutonic family life, improving the race, keeping family blood pure, that kind of thing. But he got over that right away. There was nobody more loyal to America than my father. I'm sure of that. He much regretted that he'd been even briefly taken in by anything Hitler claimed."

"I see," said Nugent. "Forgive me, Brent, but he did disapprove of your marriage, didn't he?"

"He thought we hadn't known each other long enough. That was all."

"Oh," said Nugent. "I had an idea that you had rather quarreled with him about your marriage. I mean when you married a girl he didn't think was good enough to marry into his family."

"That," said Craig dangerously, "is enough of that. As a matter of fact, Miss Cable was too good for me and the Brent family. If that is all, Lieutenant..."

"No, it isn't," said Nugent. "It's this way, Brent. District Attorney Soper thinks the girl—your former wife—did it. I'm not sure. Until something clinching and material turns up I'd like to hold off an arrest. And I've tried to give her a fair break. But she's not telling everything she knows."

"Well," said Craig, still with a dangerous look in his face.

"For one thing, she disclaims having taken the missing box of medicine. Yet her fingerprints were on the drawer of the desk where the medicine was kept; they were on the wooden handle and the panel across the front. She wouldn't explain how they got there."

My heart sunk, quite literally and heavily down toward my white oxfords; yet I'd been afraid of it. Craig said evenly, "That doesn't prove anything."

"And she got past my man late this afternoon and went outdoors. He..." Nugent stopped there and left us to conjecture what had happened to the trooper on guard in consequence. "It won't happen again," he said briefly. "But she was out of the house at the time Dr. Chivory was killed."

"A woman couldn't have killed him! Like that," said Craig.

"Mrs. Brent told us Drue Cable had been out of the house," said Nugent slowly, and looked at the ugly things that still lay there on the towel—the bright, sharp paring knife, the yellow glove.

And abruptly then, after a few more questions about Claud Chivory, they went away. As they left, Craig asked a question.

"Since the shooting episode, not unnaturally perhaps, I had felt a remarkably unpleasant sense of personal danger. This was now very much stronger. I had seen Dr. Chivory with his throat cut, huddled like an empty sack. The only motive for murder so far attributable was that he'd known something that was a danger to the murderer of Conrad Brent, or to whoever it was that shot Craig."

Koontz-Haggerty Nuptials Followed by A Reception

Two attendants served at the marriage of Miss Frances G. Haggerty, Bristol, and Mr. Louis Koontz, of Arona, in Bristol Methodist Church on Saturday afternoon at two o'clock.

The best man and bridesmaid were Mr. and Mrs. Edward Cummings, of Lafayette street. The clergyman officiating was the pastor of the church, the Rev. W. E. Preston Haas; and organ music was provided by Miss Winifred V. Tracy. The bride was given in marriage by her father, Mr. Robert Rankin.

An attractive street length dress of silk crepe, fuchsia in color, was worn by the former Miss Haggerty. Her hat was modelled of white sequins; she wore white gloves and black slippers, and a corsage of sweet peas and freshia. Mrs. Cummings selected a dress of navy blue with matching accessories; with a corsage like that worn by the bride.

Thirty guests were received at the home of the bride's parents, at 210 Pond street, after which Mr. and Mrs. Koontz left for a short honeymoon trip. They will reside at 210 Pond street.

Mr. Koontz is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Koontz, of Arona.

THE NATION'S fat-salvage goal for March is 26,550,000 lbs. To realize that tremendous amount, this community—and every other in the nation—must fill its quota. Won't you go all out to help put the drive over the top this month?

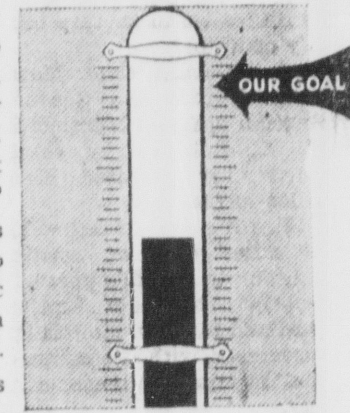

Remember! Your country is depending on those used fats to help make medicines, bullets, synthetic rubber, soaps for military and civilian use, and hundreds of other essentials.

Check your own savings by this check list. Maybe you've been overlooking some of these sources.

Approved by OPA and WFA.
Paid for by industry.

HOW TO GET EXTRA RED POINTS!

1. SAVE all bits of fat you trim from meat, and fat scraps left on plates. Keep them in a small bowl and, once a week, melt them down.
2. SCRAPE pans before washing them. No amount is too small to be of use...even a tablespoon helps!
3. SKIM stews, soups, and gravies while they cook. Afterwards, chill them and scoop off the fat.
4. SAVE water in which you cook hot dogs, sausages, and ham. Chill, and scoop off the fat.
5. KEEP the can (any tin can will do) on the back of the stove where it's handy. When full, take to your butcher. Get 2 red points and 4¢ for every pound. Start today!

Pindar and Collins led the Bristol boys in scoring with 17 and 10 points, respectively while O'Donnell was high man for the losers with 10 points.

calls the past month but that the ambulance was in service seven times.

Paul VanWagen, teacher of history at George School, Newtown, was the speaker at the forum of the Newtown Friends in the Newtown meeting house.

Prior to the talk a supper was served 40 persons, and later a number of other members came to hear Mr. VanWagen, who spoke on the Dumbarton Oaks conference. He gave a comprehensive outline of the proposals made there, and pointed out the problems he believes will confront the world conference in San Francisco on April 25.

Problems he thinks will be considered include mandates, strategic bases, headquarters for the new international organization and budgets. He declared also a constitution for the world also may be framed.

Adopting the report presented by a special committee, the Veterans' Advisory Committee of the Doylestown area completed its organization at a meeting, last week.

The committee will function through three standing committees: Personal relations, business relations and educational, and the management is vested in an execu-

Judge Boyer named the first vice-president, Rev. George M. Whitehead, as chairman of the personal relations; the second vice-president, Charles J. Happ, as chairman of business relations, and J. Leonard Halderman as chairman of education.

The adopted report of the organization plan submitted by the special committee of which Dr. John J. Bridgeman was chairman, becomes in effect the constitution and by-laws of the group and provides specific functions of each of the three committees.

The U. S. First Army also sent patrols to the river north of Cologne. To the south, the Third Army crossed the Kyll river, eight miles north of captured Trier, clearing the way for a direct dash to the Rhine.

On the Russian front, Marshal Gregory K. Zhukov's First White Russian Army, in a four-day advance of more than 60 miles, reached the Baltic to capture the coastal city of Kolberg.

At the same time, Moscow announced that the Second White Russian Army of Marshal Konstantin K. Rokossovsky reached the coast near captured Kooslin, 30 miles to the east.

Zhukov's drive reached the coast 35 miles east of Stettin-Haff, gateway to Berlin's port of Stettin, and cut the main Danzig-Stettin road and railway. Stettin itself was threatened with the capture of Pyritz, 20 miles southeast of the port city.

Tomato Growers Seek Higher Price producing counties of these two states.

These meetings are being held in Cumberland, Salem, Gloucester, Camden, Burlington, Mercer, Monmouth and Hunterdon in New Jersey and Bucks and Montgomery in Pennsylvania.

Heading the association are men of prominence in agricultural circles in both states. The president of the co-operative is Milton Tice, Bridgeton, a former president of the Cumberland County Board of Agriculture and an active member in State Potato Association. Vice-president is Walter Solly, Ivyland, Pa., a leading grower in that state.

Secretary-treasurer of the association is Joseph Hancock, Bridgeton, a successful grower in the Greenwich section.

With a membership of many hundreds of the largest and best growers, the association is asking all growers to wait until they have been given a "green light" before signing contracts for their 1945 crop.

Hancock states that it is costing today an amount in excess of $200 an acre to grow tomatoes. On a basis of $29 per ton, it takes a yield of better than 7 tons to meet costs.

In 1944 the state average was only 6.3 tons per acre, which was less than the cost of production.

Leading growers in the two-state area who are serving as directors in the association include Herman Heston, Newtown, and Walter Solly, Ivyland.

Norman C. Kratz discussed the question: "How will the new draft law affect the farmer?" He pointed out the farmers have had a hard time in getting help in the past and that the farmers are being pushed to the limit now. If the law is put into force, he said, the farmers' situation will become more acute.

Approximately 25 persons attended the meeting, which was in charge of the president, Clarence L. Detweiler. Members responded to roll call by giving short talks about Lincoln and Washington, and these were followed by committee reports.

Speaking as a representative of the crop committee, Norman Lapp said the frost is almost all out of the ground, and that the time for planting clover seed is rapidly approaching.

The report for the health and hygiene committee was given by Mrs. G. Frank Shutt, who said people had always been taught that an abundance of fresh air is required at night, but, according to Mrs. Shutt, some physicians say this is not essential.

Reporting for the domestic science committee, Mrs. Reuben A. Martin gave a recipe for an angel food cake, and Mr. Shutt, of the legislative committee, said Congress has been devoting a large amount of time to the work or fight bill.

Mrs. Norman S. Cornell, who reported for the legislative committee, told of the difficulty a recently discharged Marine had in returning to school. The young man, she said, seemed to think the educational system should be changed.

The club paper was read by Mrs. Clarence L. Detweiler, who also read an article, "I See God in America."

Howard W. Detweiler spoke briefly on the question, "What do you think of universal military training for the youth of the country?" He said countries having had compulsory military training for a large number of years have not progressed more than those which did not have the training.

The next meeting will be held in the chapel of the New Britain Baptist Church on Tuesday evening, March 27. This will be the annual meeting and it will be featured by the serving of a covered dish supper.

Cpl. Scheidig writes:
Dear Mrs. Holland:
Surprised to hear from me I guess and I just received word on your visit to our house as we call it. I just couldn't wait to write you a few lines after hearing of your visit.

I can't tell you too much of what I have encountered since I left home. There are a few things I can tell and want to brag about. The Red Cross has done a fine job in keeping the morale very high. The best way I can explain this without saying too much is by telling the experiences. When men get cold and hungry coffee and doughnuts really hit the spot which Red Cross delivered. Gifts such as cigarettes, sewing kits, books, etc., were very handy and appreciated. The clubmobile "Mis-souri" I have also encountered and enjoyed. Could go on with numerous other stories but time and space do not permit.

Hoping to see you in person before very long and happy to be able to write this letter to you.

Respectfully,
CPL. CHARLES E. SCHEIDIG.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

to support in the 1924 Democratic convention and practically repudiated in 1932 when he was a candidate seeking Hearst support.

SO THERE could have been no reasons of policy for failure to name Mr. Hoover or Mr. Dewey. It had to be for personal reasons—and those are well known. Mr. Roosevelt has a real hate of Mr. Hoover, dating from 1932. Increased by the latter's consistent criticism of his New Deal policies and accentuated by the belief that Mr. Hoover has a contempt for his mental processes. Governor Dewey earned the presidential enmity in the last campaign by repeated declaration that the first thing people now wanted to know when the White House spoke was not it is important but is it true.

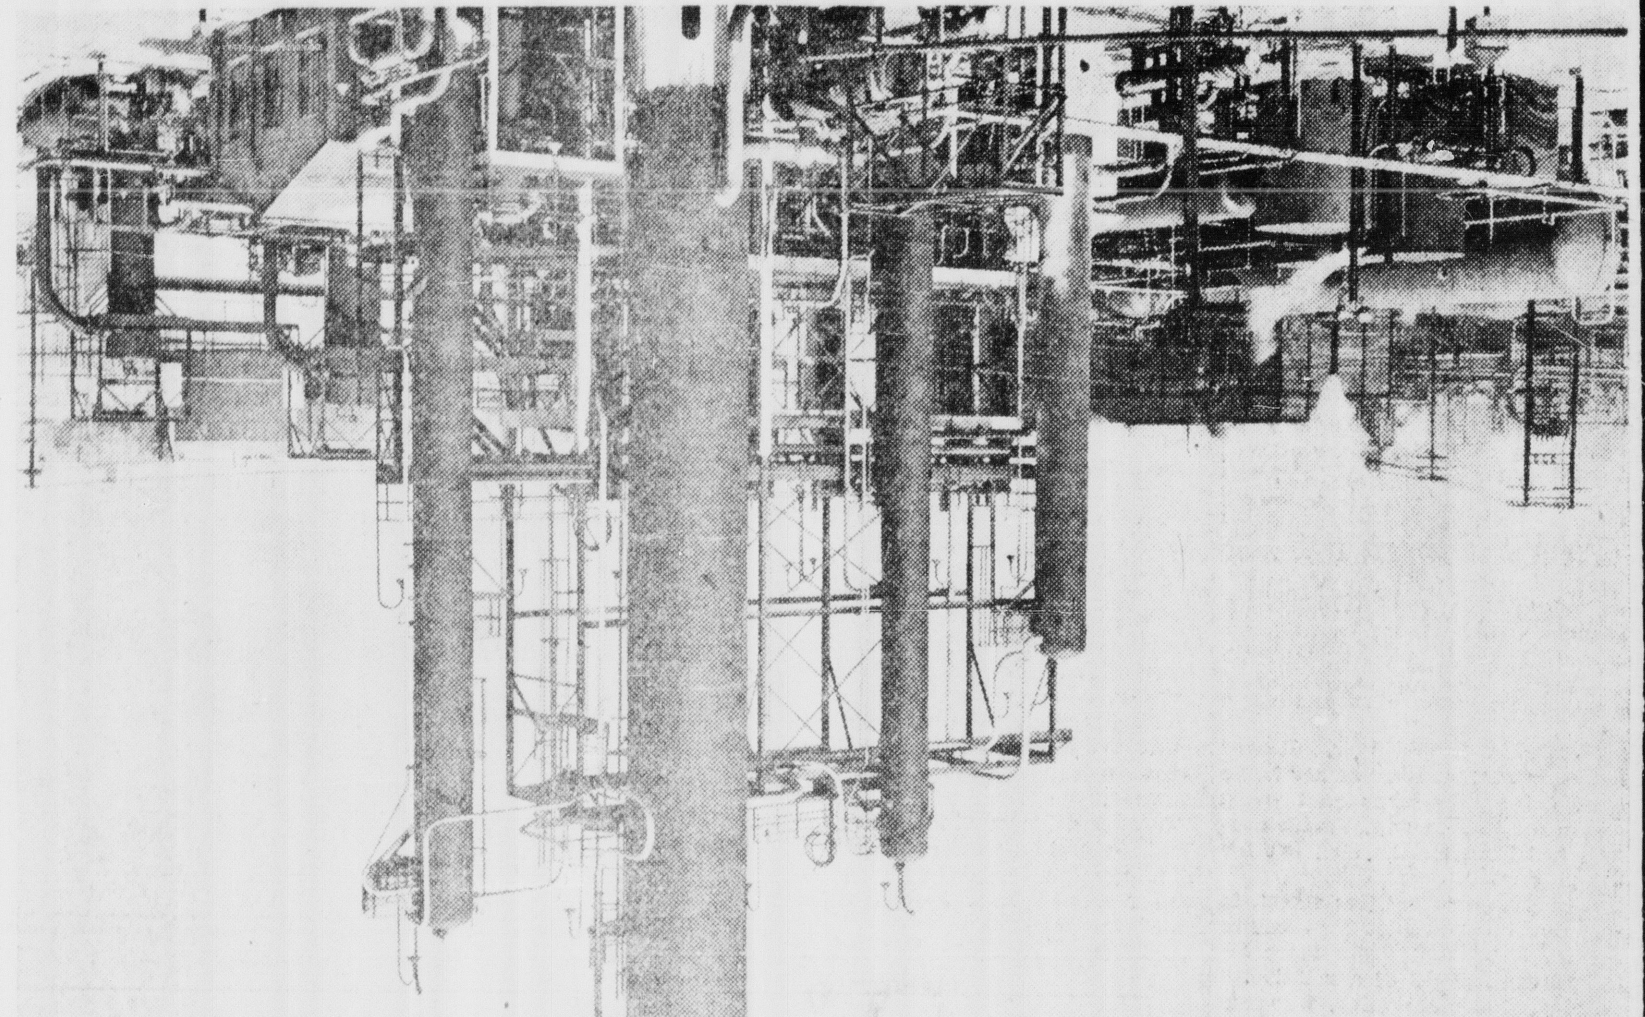

THE PRESIDENT is known to harbor personal grudges. Time and time again he has shown his inability to rise above them. This is merely the latest demonstration. From the party standpoint both Mr. Hoover and Mr. Dewey ranked above Commander Stassen. Either would have been the more natural selection. Both were passed over for Mr. Stassen, not as has been suggested, because Mr. Roosevelt wants to build him up for the Republican 1948 nomination, but because he was the best alternative to Mr. Hoover or Mr. Dewey. None of this reflects upon Mr. Stassen, whose motives in accepting appointment are above question and whose views likewise are fundamentally in accord with Dumbarton Oaks. Nevertheless, that is how he came to be chosen.

CONCERNING the course to be pursued by Senator Vandenberg and Mr. Stassen, there are those who think that they are likely to dominate the delegation. This notion is based on the belief that not only are they the two most forceful members but that their wholehearted support of the San Francisco outcome is vital to the ratification of the treaty by the Senate. Hence, it is felt that their views will receive every consideration and carry great weight. Fortunately, their views are largely in accord with the Dumbarton Oaks agreement and on no basic point is there much chance of a clash. Certainly none is anticipated. However, there are important details upon which wide divergence is possible. And on these Senator Vandenberg and Mr. Stassen believe they should have complete freedom of action.

NOT THAT either has any thought of partisan politics in this business but neither have they any desire to seem a White House rubber stamp. Neither has the least notion of making trouble, but they do want to know what it is all about and their friends say intend to find out. Naturally, the delegates will confer with Mr. Roosevelt, and it is expected he will reveal to them inside facts of the Yalta conference of which the American people know nothing. With this information the delegation will hold its conference and it is in these conferences that the Messrs. Vandenberg and Stassen are expected to present their ideas and fight for them. There may be some pretty hot debates in these delegation conferences. But the final outcome will be the American position. And no matter what the early divisions among the delegates that position will be supported as a unit. That is the expectation. Anything else would be very bad, indeed.

WE TURNED THIS PLANT UPSIDE DOWN!

25 YEARS' PETROLEUM PROGRESS SINCE PEARL HARBOR

ATLANTIC

WHITE FLASH • MOTOR OIL • LUBRICATION SERVICE

Here was the situation: more and more alkylate was needed for more and more combat fuel... and the increase had to be achieved with little or no new equipment. Atlantic's scientists knew that output could be stepped up by crowding more feed-stock into the plant. But experiments showed that this meant a serious slump in anti-knock rating of the alkylate. It also meant high consumption of strategic chemicals. Engineers rose to the emergency... sparked the upside down idea. They reversed the pumps... sent the reacting mixtures in the opposite direction... stood the operation on its head. Of a dozen novel improvements, this was the most important. Bottlenecks were eliminated by a change here, a change there, as other tinkering proceeded. All contributed to holding quality at the same level while pushing through more feed... multiplying production by three. Straight ingenuity won this victory—the ingenuity of Atlantic's research staff. It's working for you now to help win battles. It will be working for you tomorrow, bringing you finer petroleum products than you have ever known.
